Open Access Statement

Open access in publishing allows readers free access to content and permits material reuse with the copyright owner's consent. For authors, understanding their rights and the potential third-party use of their work is vital in both traditional and open-access publishing environments. However, copyright treatment in the digital age is complex, as traditional copyright laws often clash with contemporary digital information-sharing practices.

IJABE is an open-access journal. The journal's articles are published under the Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License (CC BY), allowing unrestricted use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided proper attribution to the original authors and source is maintained. This licensing facilitates broader information sharing and collaboration, aligning with the evolving dynamics of copyright in the digital environment.

Copyright Statement

Under the IJABE Non-Exclusive License and Publishing Agreement, authors retain the copyright of their articles, excluding third-party images and materials added by IJABE, which remain copyrighted by their respective owners. Authors may freely disseminate and republish their work, comply with third-party copyright requirements and properly cite the original publication. By contributing to the journal, authors permit others to reproduce their articles, including graphics and third-party materials they provide, as per the journal's Publishing Agreement.
